

Thanks again for taking the time to look at my older Roadcrafter suit. I understand you don't often work on suits over 15 years, lucky for me, I just needed a pocket flap fixed. It was nice to meet the manager, and speak with the head of repair that called me for the quote on the items I wanted to get fixed. And as promised I've brought in the original inspection card, and the original pads the suit came with for "show and tell" to whom ever is interested to see some relics from 92. It's nice to see a local company that has been in business this long and have employees still working there after 30+ years. It really speaks to the quality of the craft and is also why these suits have a decent resale value.

I've been a fan of Aerostitch for over 20 years. Though I couldn't afford a new suit, I kept my eye on used ones. Last summer I finally found one that fit. I was told it was worn a few times when it was new, then hung up in the closet until now. Which is probably true because when I brought it home, it looked immaculate, the reflectors showed no signs of wear anywhere around their edges. The wear you see is from me running the suit through a gentle rinse cycle, trying to tame down the closet odor. I removed the original pads before doing so and that's when I found the inspection card with all the signatures. The silicone seams in the pads were probably intact before I weasled them out of their respective pockets, but I purchased newer hard shell pads for obvious reasons.

Thanks again,

JJ High
